THE ACTIONS COMMITTEE CONFERENCE

The Zionist Actions Committee (Administrative Council), at its conference in Berlin adopted, by a vote of 41 to 4, a resolution favouring the report of the Agency Commission recently made public, with certain modifications.

Two texts of the resolution were reported in the "Jewish Daily Bulletin." The first one contained a modicum of dignity and self respect. The second one, having apparently been revised to suit the Executive, was bereft of even this faint vestige of pride. It is a servile spineless statement of surrender, abject even in its suggestion of suppressed revolt.

Four members of the Committee had the courage to stick to their convictions: the two Revisionists and Dr. Gruenbaum and Dr. Solowejchik. The Poele Zion as usual, when confronted by a serious situation, flunked. They covered up their tracks by offering a resolution of their own, which, of course, was defeated. Then they fell into line.

It is not that the majority approves of the Agency report. In the course of the deliberations, extending over a period of more than a week, it made it abundantly clear that it abhorred the Agency Commission's report. The Poele Zion and the Hitachduth, and the Mizrachi delegates showed that they fully appreciated the viciousness and dangerousness of the underlying attitude of the so-called Agency. They know their Zionism. They know the difference between an idealistic movement, growing out of the depths of a people's vital process and a bit of "charitarian" collection-plate rattling. Throughout the proceedings their hearts were bleeding. They were alive to the humiliation of their situation. But in the final moment their courage failed them. The whip cracked. And they all fell on their faces and muttered their phrases of surrender.

The spectacle is galling: A body of grown-up intelligent men, at the head of an inspired movement, all stand in line with blanched, pain-distorted faces reaching out their hands for the spoonful of repugnant castor-oil which they are bidden to swallow. They lick the spoon and screw up their faces in a sickly grimace of happiness. Under their breath they curse at unkind fate or is it at themselves?—while their lips smack with simulated relish and they recite their unconvincing "thank you's."

There were tragic figures at the conference: Ussishkin, Ruppin, Mossen-ohn. Zionism is to them the motif of their being as cultured men. There is the panorama of Jewish life around them. Is there meaning or value in it? They sought beauty and harmony in the puzzling vistas of struggle and tragedy. They discovered an answer to its riddle: It was Jewish nationalism. By the application of the principles implied in this concept they could translate the confused mass into a significant tale of national evolution. And in the life of their people they found the key to the meaning of their own life. The peculiarities of the Jewish national character were the strands that formed the web of their own personalities. And Jewish life meant more to them than a passive process of existence. It meant heroism, sacrifice, idealism, a striving for national destiny. Well, these Zionists were at the conference and were witnesses to the bargain that was being made by Weizmann—the bartering of Zionism with all its philosophy, and idealism, and inspirational qualities for a shadow of a promise of money. They fumed and raged in their impotence. Ussishkin and Mossensohn voted against the executive on one of the opposition's resolutions. It was an outcry of despair, a gesture of anguish. And in the end they closed their eyes and mumbled their assent to the executive's demands.

The old spectre was there at this conference in all its ugliness, but ludicrous this time in its hollowness. For years the Zionist conferences and congresses have been haunted by the spectre which American Zionists dangled before them—the threat of financial starvation. American Zionists have been in the habit of strutting around like rich relatives forcing their wishes upon the Zionist world by threatening disinheritance as the penalty for disobedience. "American plans" and "American methods" have been rammed down the throats of world Zionism by the power of American money.

At this conference Louis Lipsky the Zionist hireling, and Jacob Fishman of East Broadway, again presumed to speak for American Zionism repeating the same old refrain: "Do what we bid you or you will get none of our American money." The threat sounded flat. After all Lipsky and Fishman are not the ones who give the money in America nor are they the ones who inspire others to give. Still this old gag was not without some influence at the conference. Weizmann did not hesitate to make use of this legend as a whip to crack over the backs of his recalcitrant followers.

Zionism was humiliated at this conference. It is true that under the influence of Weizmannism the Zionist organization abdicated its position of leadership in Jewish life five years ago when it adopted the Lipsky scheme of an Agency. But the Zionist organization never realized the implications of its decision until just now when the sordidness of the situation was made evident by the Agency's report. Zionists who were too short-sighted before to see what was going to happen as a result of the Agency scheme now appreciate what they have let themselves in for. They stand horrified at the situation which now confronts them. And there is Weizmann—relentless, fanatical in his obstinacy driving them on, towards the cataclysmic climax which is inevitable.

Weizmann's advocacy of the Agency scheme involves an attitude of Zionist defeatism. The one necessarily implies the other. The more one presses the need of the enlarged Agency, the more one accentuates and helps to bring about the weakening of the Zionist organization. Weizmann's efforts to effectuate the Agency have involved a corresponding neglect of the needs of the Zionist organization. The result perhaps is that the organization has become so weak that an Agency or something is needed to carry on the work. The tragedy is, that so many Zionists who acclaim the Agency do not understand that they are helping to create a monster that will devour its own parent. And many who are aware of the danger are too helpless and impotent to avert the danger.

SOVIET RULE HEADS JEWS TO FARMING

Moscow.—Forty-five thousand Russian Jewish tradesmen, forced from the field of retail merchandising by the Soviet co-operative monopoly, are today the vanguard of a Jewish back-to-the-land movement which promises to sweep Russia.

More than 10,000 families, formerly small storekeepers, have been settled on farms since 1924 and there are 35,000 applicants for Government land.

Moscow officials see no signs that the tide has reached its crest. Estimates of the potential number of Jews who will sell out their dwindling stocks and buy farm implements in the next few years reach as high as 100,000.

The breadth of the movement, in fact, has revived discussion in Government circles of the projected "Jewish republic" in the Amur region. If this plan should be carried through, a large area of excellent farming country would be turned over to Russian Jewish colonists.

Two other prairie sections are sharing with the Amur area the bulk of present Jewish migration. Strong Jewish colonies are rapidly forming in Crimea and Krivoy Rog under stimulus provided by the Soviet Government.

The movement also has the backing of wealthy American Jews, including Felix Warburg, Louis Marshall and Julius Rosenwald. In general the results have encouraged the Government to go ahead with the project. Even the question of religious liberty or lack of liberty has apparently been smothered over satisfactorily.

Private houses are turned into synagogues for the purposes of worship and there is no attempt on the part of the Government to interfere. The same rule applies to schools. Religious institutions of instruction are forbidden, but there is nothing in Soviet law to prevent the colonists from teaching their children any language or belief.

A number of New York rabbis and laymen are on the National Committee of the China Famine Relief which is hoping to assuage the starvation brought about by the present Civil War and by the blighted crops.

ZIONIST ACTIONS COMMITTEE MEETS AT BERLIN

The General Committee of the World Zionist Organization, which transacts the business of the organization between the congresses, has been in session in Berlin, under the chairmanship of Dr. Leon Motzkin. Forty-five members of the committee and all the members of the executive committee attended the sessions. The report presented by Dr. Weizmann outlined the political situation and indicated the friendly relations existing now between the Zionist organization and the mandatory power. The organization was notified of the appointment of Sir John Robert Chancellor as High Commissioner of Palestine and since the crisis the relations between the Zionist organization and the Palestine Government have become much more intimate. Reports were also submitted by Mr. Sokolow, Dr. Eder, Mr. Sacher and Miss Szold. The most important feature in Dr. Weizmann's report was the resolution regarding the Jewish Agency and the report of the Survey Commission. The executive committee asked that the conference adopt the report in principle, although it may offer some suggestions and changes with regard to certain details.

This brought forth a storm of criticism, the radical Zionists and the Revisionists leading in the discussion. Several insisted upon the complete rejection of the recommendations of the Experts' Commission, insisting that an understanding between the Zionists and the non-Zionists is impossible, while others argued with equal vehemence that the complete refusal of the report would be nothing short of a crime that will go down in history.

Council Camp for Girls

Camp Adar, the camp for girls at Sixteen Island Lake, which is under the auspices of the Council of Jewish Women, is entertaining the second of four groups that will be cared for. Mrs. Harry Gross, director, has arranged a schedule of hiking, dancing, dramatic arts and crafts. The girls upon arrival are supplied with toothbrush, paste, washcloth, khaki suit for week days, white middy for the Sabbath, drinking cup, running shoes, nightgown, and bed linen. During the swimming periods from 11 to 12 a.m. and 4 to 5 p.m., Miss Carol Michaels, the instructor, supervises land drill, breathing exercises and swimming lessons. General activity periods are from 10 to 11 a.m. and 3 to 4 p.m. Miss Hilda Rosenstein teaches dancing to music on the green. Misses Becky Cohen and Rose Finkelstein direct arts and crafts to groups divided into juniors, intermediates and seniors. Camp fires, song and cheer, stunt nights, masquerades, parties and hay-cart rides are arranged for evenings. Friday evening and Saturday morning services are conducted by the director.

Sunday, July 29, the Council of Jewish Women was hostess to members and friends at the Council Camp at Fourteen Island Lake. A swimming meet was held in the afternoon under the direction of Miss Carol Michaels, the instructress. Before entering the water, the campers performed land drill and breathing exercises. The campers divided into groups gave an exhibition of strokes, stunts, motionless floating, swimming, water games, races, undressing in the water and matches. The second group boasts fourteen swans and three mermaids. To enter the swan class, a camper must jump into the box unaided, disappear beneath the water, do dead man's float and swim breast strokes. The mermaids swim three lengths of the swimming box, breast stroke, one length life-saving stroke, float on the back and do two side strokes. Most of these girls could not swim before coming to camp. Work done in the arts and crafts department, with Miss Rose Finklestein as instructress, was exhibited. The juniors displayed enamelled coloured clay beads and raffia picture frames; intermediates, raffia baskets with coloured bands and borders and coloured berets; seniors, coloured tie-dye scarves, pastel dance costumes and felt purses in contrasting colours with cut-out stencil designs. Camp visitors were served with sandwiches, tea and cake. S. Cowans, one of the guests donated $5, and M. Markowitz, $2 for a treat for the camp. The winners of prizes at the stunt night entertainments were: first prize, Rose Levine; second prize, Rose and Ray Kanofsky. First prize for skit, put on by Annie Stein, Becky Levine, Gertrude Scopp, Ray Kanofsky, Hazel and Bertha Wolofsky. CONVENTION SOON

The convention of the Zionist Order of Habonim takes place at Chateau Quinte, Ste. Marguerets, August 24, 25 and 26, under the leadership of B. M. Weiner, Supreme Host of the Order. H. L. Sourkes, Supreme Chaplain, chairman of the convention, will preside at the sessions. Delegates will go to Ste. Marguerets by motor. M. Fromson is chairman of the transportation committee.

Sunday, July 8, was the twenty-seventh anniversary of the death of Theodore Herzl, the founder of the modern political Zionism, and the procession of Jewish mourners to his grave in Vienna formed a line which took four hours to pass their objective. Many foreign delegations were among them, including representatives of the Trumpelor Youth Organization in Hungary, Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia and Rumania. The transference of Herzl's remains for reburial in Palestine, in accordance with his own wish and with a resolution by the Zionist Congress in 1925, is still awaiting completion of arrangements.

Visual Defects in Jews

By D. TSCHERNIAKOFF

The various investigations on which the Jewish Health Organization of Great Britian has been engaged for some time past are evoking considerable interest. Following closely upon the publication of the report on the comparative intelligence of Jewish and non-Jewish children comes a preliminary communication in the April number of the British Journal of Ophthalmology on the results of an inquiry into the incidence of visual defect among school children. The desirability of the inquiry was suggested by references to this subject which were made for a number of years in the reports of the London County Council Medical Officer. There was evidence that the incidence of visual defect among Jewish school children was abnormally heavy, and that it was the graver forms of eye trouble that were especially common among them. An investigation carried out by the London County Council in 1924 had the effect of confirming these observations. Through the medium of the organization the attention of Jewish educational associations was called to these facts, and to the concern with which they were viewed by the authorities, and certain measures were taken to alleviate the conditions of study in evening classes to which the harm was largely attributed. The gravity of the position revealed and the implication of responsibility which it carried for the present system of religious instruction called for careful study of the question. This the Organization had undertaken to do, and one is impressed with the care and thoroughness with which the work is being done by Dr. A. Sourasky, who is carrying out the researches under the general direction of Dr. A. H. Levy, the chairman of the Organization.

The investigation falls into two distinct sections. In the first, a comparison is made between the incidence of visual defect among Jewish and non-Jewish boys; in the second the type of error (whether short-sighted or long-sight, etc.) is considered.

There were 1,649 boys examined in a group of Jewish evening schools in the east end of London and 600 non-Jewish boys in London County Council schools in the same district. The result of the tests showed that the percentage of Jewish boys with vision defect was 43.2, as against only 21.7 of the non-Jewish. The incidence of defective vision in Jewish boys is, therefore, about double that in non-Jewish. In this respect the figures correspond with the findings of previous inquiries. But the conclusion which has often been drawn from this that the extra hours of evening study in Jewish classes were responsible for this grievous condition is not found to be justified, since a further analysis of the data obtained proved that the heavy incidence of the defect in Jewish boys is not a progressive factor with the advance of school life, but is already present in the same measure at the very beginning of the school age. Thus, at the age of five, before the day or evening school could have produced any appreciable effect on the child's vision, there is hardly less defect found than at the school - leaving age between twelve and fourteen. In fact, the returns point to the opposite conclusion, and show that the prevalence of visual defect cannot be ascribed to school conditions as it remains stationary throughout the school career, the figures being practically identical year after year. It would, therefore, appear that the preponderance of the defect among Jewish children is a racial character and is not determined or brought out by an excessive amount of close work which Jewish boys have to do in evening schools.

Defective vision was then studied with reference to the type of error involved, and it was found on an investigation of defects seen among 516 Jewish and 892 non-Jewish children that the proportion of long-sighted and short-sighted was such as to suggest that among Jewish children, short-sight is twice as frequent as among non-Jewish. At the same time, the tests led to the detection of very striking differences in the kind of long-sight observed among Jewish children—differences which have a great bearing upon the production of myopia (short sight). It must be understood that practically all children are born long-sighted; if they become short-sighted they do so during childhood, but of the different types of long sight that may turn into short sight, one type, "low hypermetropia," is more prone to do so than others. It is by the greater prevalence of this condition in Jewish children which the inquiry seems to have established that the investigator accounts for poorer visual acuity in general among them. "Low hypermetropia" is more common in Jewish children than any other form of long sight, although the contrary is the case with non-Jewish children. Hence the pre-disposition to short sight present in Jewish children and the greater incidence of defective vision of which short sight is the chief cause. That this anomaly is not due to the influence of the school is seen from the fact that it is noted to the same extent among the younger children whose eyesight could not have yet been affected by the school. The conclusion is thus reached that the excess of short sight in Jewish children is the result of a racial pre-disposition, and is not caused by intensive school training.

Another section of the paper deals with the differences in sight defect between boys and girls. It is shown that whilst among Jewish school entrants the proportion of Jewish children suffering from short sight is about the same in both sexes, many more boys become short-sighted as they go through school than girls. This, then, would appear to support the contention that the more exacting school studies to which the Jewish boy is subjected tend to make him short-sighted. But among non-Jewish children the process is found to operate similarly, considerably more boys than girls becoming short-sighted by the time they leave school.

Dr. Sourasky's conclusions in the preliminary report may, therefore, be summarized as follows:

(1) There are twice as many visual defectives among Jewish children as among non-Jewish.

(2) This is not due to excessive school work, but is a racial defect.

(3) Short sight is more common among Jewish children as a result of the normal development of eyes with an inherited structural fault.

(4) Proportionately, there are more cases of short-sightedness among Jewish boys than among Jewish girls.

(5) This cannot be attributed to the extra school work imposed on the boys, but can only be explained by a sex-determined influence which affects the boys unfavourably, the same factor being at work among non-Jewish children.

The findings are certainly very striking, and should make the report of great general interest, if the level of the first paper is maintained and the accuracy of the evidence is confirmed by subsequent tests. For educationists and parents, a warning may be added. Whatever the ultimate explanation may be of the excessive defect among Jewish children in comparison with non-Jewish (and this is still a matter of lively controversy among specialists), there is no doubt that the excess exists. The movement set on foot by the Jewish Health Organization to promote better understanding and greater care in this respect must not, therefore, be relaxed. The problem is not only one of improving the position relative to the general average for London schools. Every precaution should be taken not to intensify the defect and every means adopted to remove likely causes of deterioration of vision, whether at home or in the school, so as to reduce the incidence as far as possible below that average.—Jewish Chronicle.

The Jew of Acre

By LOUIS GOLDING

It was a hard bright city we came to, my friend and I, in a hard bright world. The name of the city was Acre, set upon the edge of the Gentile sea, in northwest Palestine. It is a city of much cruelty, which Jewish law and Jewish mercy have not tempered. At the foot of the clock-tower of Jezzar Pasha, at the point where a thousand sword tips of sunlight intersected, an old woman squatted on her hams, begging. She was shrouded in black like a funeral monument. Her lean-cupped hand extended from the black draperies like a carved bough. I dropped a coin into her hand, wondering whether she might not truly be petrified there. With a creaking, like the noise a false limb makes in its socket, the other arm of the old woman drew her black veil aside. Grey and corpse-like in the insolent sun, a noseless hag stared at us. I shuddered. My knees trembled. "A holy lady," murmured my friend, who is learned in these matters. "A daughter of St. Clare." "How holy?" I asked sickly. "Over six hundred years ago," said he, "the Saracens were marching upon the city to rout out the Christian dogs that had bayed the moon in Acre for a whole infidel century. The Christians in Acre knew that doom was upon them. Many fled. But the Sisters of Clare, foremothers of this black creature, the noseless one, would not so lightly leave the place where Paul's sainted foot had trodden, and the early Christians gathered about him to hear news of his wanderings. They stayed. They knew what men these Muslims were, what delicate palates they had for female flesh. They cut off their noses, in the hope that, noseless, they might be permitted still to haunt the city Paul had hallowed. They had not, alas, underestimated the delicacy of the Muslim palate. So outraged were the Muslims upon entering the city to see good meat so wantonly defaced and every miserable lady standing in a growing pool of her own blood, that they finished the work the good ladies had started and chopped all their heads off."

"Are you suggesting," I said, "that this poor creature did also deliberately——."

"I suggest nothing," he said. "If you have no sense of historic continuity, I cannot provide you with one."

"But is it not just as likely that this old woman suffered for just an opposite reason? That she aggravated her charms with henna and spikenard to enchant some Christian infidel, and her husband surprised that evil love-making, and hacked off her nose, as cuckolded Muslims are wont to do, they tell me?"

"Anywhere but in Acre," he insisted stubbornly.

"There might be less romantic explanations for her malady. I met a Cheikh proceeding to his tent in the Matmata country, which is in Libya. He was very proud of his condition. He, too, had no nose."

"This is Acre," he insisted, "not the Matmata country. There has been much lopping-off of noses and cutting-off of ears in Acre."

The old lady had so pained and outraged me, lifting aside her veil from the hollow infamy of her almost exposed skull, that still my mind plunged stupidly further and further from Acre, Syria, Africa, in the hope that it might thus dispel this present nightmare.

"Lopping off of ears? Van Gogh," I said, "had no Syrian blood?"

"It has not been decided," he replied. "The case of Chaim Farhi is better authenticated. He was a Jew, serving the metropolis of the Jewless land. I approved of your own expression—'the excluded country.' I approve of your comparison between Acre and the Vatican. But does history record any land or town or corporation that excluded the Jew generic and was not compelled to include the Jew particular. Let me tell you, then, of the included Jew, Chaim Farhi, the Jew of Acre. He was, you must know, the servant of the flint-hearted Pasha, Achmed el Jezzar. That was his tower, where the old woman squatted. Come away. You look green in this hard sunlight. It is more garish than the limes of a cheap theatre. This is the way to his mosque. It does not interest you? You have already developed a dislike for him? I don't wonder. They called him the Butcher. He betrayed his master, one of the gallantest chiefs in the history of this town, the Cheikh Daher el Amer, and reigned in his stead. It is Jezzar Pasha who has the fame of having thwarted Napoleon when he besieged Acre in the campaigns of 1799. But it was the Jew, Chaim Farhi. He it was who robbed Napoleon of Cairo and Baghdad; for as you know, if Acre had fallen to him, all the East would have unrolled itself before his feet, like a carpet. A more diplomatic Attila, a more resplendent Tamburlaine, all the empires between Samarkand and Peking——."

"The sunlight of Acre affects my complexion less seriously than your imagination. The Jew, Chaim Farhi, you were saying——."

"I was saying that Chaim Farhi was more responsible than the Pasha or his English ally, Sidney Smith, for the defeat of Napoleon before those ancient walls. You may just see the smouldering battlements there, beyond those palm trees. Think of Napoleon gnashing his teeth. Think of Chaim Farhi adjusting his phylacteries. He was a pious man, it has been said, though he was no stranger to high politics. His father before him, Saul Farhi, was minister to the treasury at Damascus. And Napoleon, finding the gnashing of his teeth no more profitable than all his battering at the impregnable fortress, attempted a little subtle bribery instead. But Chaim was not to be bribed. He felt he owed it, perhaps, to the spirit of that earlier Maccabee, Simon by name, who had attempted to capture the town in the year 163, and failed, that he himself must defend the town and not fail. The phylacteries of Chaim were more resolute than Malta, more unshakeable than the Pyramids. Napoleon raised the siege. The Corsican would not supplant Brahma at Benares nor grow pigtails in his palace at Peking. Chaim Farhi turned to his devotions.

"But there was something about him that his master did not like. It was, of course, unforgivable that people should be attributing to the Jew the credit for the defence of Acre. For a Jew, by incontrovertible reasoning, is nothing more than a Jew. And what sort of an impression would the admiral, Sidney Smith, carry back with him to England, if a Jew were allowed... And

Social Life in 1905— Do You Remember?—

In Montreal at the Montefiore Club Rooms, Miss Rebecca Friedman, daughter of Mrs. N. Friedman, Bishop Street, was married to Nathan J. Fraid, of Cornwall, Ont. Rabbi H. Abramowitz and Rev. S. Goldstein officiated. The bride wore a princess gown of white lace and carried white roses. She was given away by her eldest brother, C. L. Friedman, and was attended by Miss Fraid, sister of the groom, as maid of honour, who wore white crepe de chine. The bridesmaids were Misses Hattie Kellert, Annie Samuels and Essie Hirsch, gowned alike in pale chiffon and carrying pink roses and carnations in shower bouquets. The best man was A. L. Fraid, brother of the groom. Groomsmen were H. N. Friedman, S. Kellert and M. J. Hirsch. The canopy which was decorated with smilax was held by Nattie Cohen, Noel Friedman, Horace Cohen and Arthur Friedman. The bride's mother was gowned in grey peau de soie and the groom's mother wore black crepe de chine with touches of white. The couple left by train for New York, thence by steamer to Florida before going to Cornwall to make their home. Among the gifts was a cabinet of silverware from the brother and sister of the bride. The groom's present to the bride was a diamond ornament and to the bridesmaids, pearl hearts. The Montefiore Club gave the couple a basket of flowers. Born, to Mr. and Mrs. E. Cohen, a son. Salonica Jews Present Appeal to Morgenthau

Henry Morgenthau, who has recently been visiting Greece, was presented with a memorandum by the Jewish community of Salonica in which the economic plight of the Jews of that city is described in detail and an appeal is made for immediate relief. The memorandum declares that in the great fire in 1917, the homes of 11,000 Jewish householders were burnt down and thirty-six synagogues and twelve schools were destroyed. Most of the Jewish householders did not carry any insurance on their properties so that they remained penniless. Much of the land has been confiscated by the municipality in its town planning scheme and the owners received but little compensation. Since the autumn of 1922, the influx of Greek refugees from Asia Minor deprived a large number of the Salonica Jews of their livelihood. In 1926, about 450 Jewish families of the poorer classes were rendered homeless because of the demolition of the district for the purpose of introducing a sewage system. Three hundred more Jewish families will soon be thrown out of their homes by further demolitions planned by the Town Planning System. The total annual expenditure of the Jewish community amounts to about ten million drachmas, of which only 250,000 are contributed by the municipal authorities. The town contributes annually sixteen million drachmas for philanthropic objects, so that only one and a half per cent. of the total disbursements for charity go to the Jewish institutions. Up to two years ago, 700,000 drachmas were granted to the Jews out of total budget of ten million. The request is made for a loan of $200,000, which will be used to solve the desperate housing problem and to assist Jewish workers. The community itself is unable to cope with the problem and outside help is imperative.

It appears that the last Greek Cabinet has agreed to allocate the sum of 1,200,000 drachmas annually for the Jewish schools of Salonica. Before the measure was passed upon by Parliament, the Government fell and the Jews are doubtful whether Venizelos will agree to abide by the proposal of the former cabinet. Without the state subsidy, it will be possible for the community to operate the Jewish schools during the coming season.

THE NEW HIGH COMMISSIONER OF PALESTINE

Sir John Robert Chancellor, who was appointed to succeed Lord Plumer as High Commissioner of Palestine, is spoken of in the highest terms of praise in well-informed circles in England, as the most fitting person to continue the work begun by Sir Herbert Samuel and Lord Plumer. It is confidently asserted that the new High Commissioner is very sympathetic with the Jewish hope regarding Palestine and that he will surely aid materially in the economic upbuilding of the country.

The Manchester Guardian is informed that the post of High Commissioner for Palestine had been offered to General Smuts, at present the head of the South African Union, and that it was understood that he had accepted it. General Smuts was very closely identified with the framing of the famous Balfour Declaration and it is an established fact that the command of the army sent to capture Palestine was offered to him before it was offered to General Allenby. The journal suggests that apparently General Smuts in the end found it impossible to leave South Africa, and so the scheme had to be abandoned.

A Great Organization Which Ensures Uniformity in Quality of Whole Milk and Ice Cream

From hundreds of prize dairy farms throughout Western Ontario, the Carruthers-Silverwood Company receive their supplies for Ice Cream and "Whole" Milk distribution.

It is because of the wide selection of these sources of supply that strict uniformity in the high content of butterfat (cream) in the milk is made possible.

Thus the great Carruthers-Silverwood "chain of service" is demonstrated not only in the prompt delivery of "Whole" Milk from each one of 19 dairies in Ontario cities and towns, but it extends right to the sources of supply which guarantee uniform richness in quality of "Whole" milk and "Smoother than Velvet" Ice Cream throughout the entire year.

the fellow was so damned handsome, the puppy! He'd show him handsome! The insolence of the vile Jew! They didn't call him Butcher for nothing.

"So he had one of Chaim Farhi's eyes taken out, to teach him manners. The air of Acre, you understand, the Acre tradition. Farhi was touchingly grateful that his master had thought fit to leave him one eye. He redoubled his zeal and loyalty. He belonged to that older order of Jew whom your Kinglake encountered, though he was a very distinguished specimen—'Jews offering services and receiving blows.' They are not like that nowadays, at Kfar Gileadi and Metullah. But Farhi with one eye was still more attractive than Jezzar Pasha, in the gazelle eyes of the Syrian maidens. He had a jaunty way of hiding the gouged-out socket by cocking his turban down over one ear. He was quite irresistible, a Valentino of the eastern world.

"It was a mistake; he realized it. But short of removing the other eye for himself he hardly knew what there was to be done about it. Jezzar's business would suffer seriously if he did, or if Jezzar did it for him. He began to hope that things might remain as they were, when some malignant fellow told Jezzar Pasha the story of the sisters of St. Clare and their noses. Jezzar howled with laughter. He thought it the funniest joke he had heard for years. And then he sent his representative over to Chaim, with a knife, and his compliments. If Chaim had been anything of a courter of fair maidens, there can be no doubt his career in that direction was now definitely at an end. He devoted himself with so much more zest to the cause of the humorous Pasha that that gentleman's peers in Aleppo and Smyrna must have gravely considered the question whether a ruler may get everything that he is worth out of his vizier whilst he still retains possession of his nose. Jezzar died and Chaim supervised his burial with great piety. He must have felt a certain sense of relief, despite his almost pathological attachment to the dead comedian. He was not himself destined to such graceful obsequries. In due course, one of his own disciples, Abdullah, took over the reins of office, and it was expected by the Jews of Acre, and doubtless by Chaim himself, that, noseless and eyeless though it must be, he might now look forward to a golden old age. It is a sad tale, a sad tale (sighed my friend). Abdullah had him assassinated in 1820—a year before Napoleon died, though I attach no special importance to that fact. He had long lost his beauty. It was not on that score that Abdullah tied the stone round his neck and hurled him into the sea—just beyond the ramparts there. He committed the unpardonable crime of persisting in his loyalty and intelligence.

"All that was over a hundred years ago. The good old times. God bless the Turks! And Lord Allenby! Yes, Lord Allenby, with even more vigour. Shall we sit down and have coffee here, on one of these small rush stools?"

"I feel," said I, "a sort of frostbite at the bridge of the nose and at the edge of the ears."

"The sun is very strong," he said. "If often affects——."

"I do not like," I insisted, "the atmosphere of Acre nor the local customs."

We swung forth along the sea's edge over the small hillocks heaped by the water and the large dunes heaped by the wind. We swung forth out of the excluded country. The Bay of Acre slashes the level coast-line like the scimitar of Jezzar Pasha. Beyond the bay's curve, the terraces of Haifa climb against the long ridge of Carmel. The ships ride at anchor in the roadstead, out in the middle sea. Their decks are crowded with pioneers, who have set forth from Ekaterinoslav and from Oil City. Chaim Farhi has come forth out of the sea again. There is no stone about his neck. He has both eyes and all his features intact. The bread that Abdullah Pasha cast upon the waters is come back after many days.—Jewish Chronicle.

JEWS' COLLEGE TO HAVE NEW BUILDING

The British school for training rabbis, Jews' College, is apparently going through a process of reconstruction and expansion. While the matter is still pending it is reasonably certain that it will soon become part of London University. Mr. S. Japhet, the president of the Council of the college, celebrated his seventieth birthday anniversary by contributing the sum of $25,000 toward a new building for the college. Principal Buchler's report presented at the annual meeting indicated that the college had now nineteen students and an additional dozen in the matriculation class. The principal speaker at the "Speech Day" exercises, an annual affair of the college, was Mr. Elkan N. Adler, who told of the history of the college in relation to other seminaries in different lands, and the gradual progress of the institution during the fifty-three years of its existence. The officers elected for the ensuing year are as follows: Chairman of the Council, Mr. S. Japhet; treasurers, Mr. Otto M. Spiell and Mr. Jacob Wasserman; secretary, Dayan Dr. A. Feldman.

Loop Games

Wet grounds postponed the games in the Jewish Community Loop last Monday night, the 23rd of July. In Tuesday's games Bnai Brith won 7 to 0 from S.A.M., Buddy Greisman allowing only one hit. In the late game, Y.M.H.A. won from Mt. Sinai 14 to 6, Balmy Cohen being the leading hitter with four hits. In the Wednesday night games Leonards won an exhibition game from an all-star team, score 9 to 2. In the late game Hasmonians gave Herzl their first defeat of the year, by the score of 6 to 5 in one of the most sensational games played this season. The winners got five runs in the third frame on clean hitting, and fought sensationally to stave off the efforts of the Herzls to pull the game out of the fire. Miller and Salsberg were the big hitters for the winners with Miller, Salsberg, Simon and Dunn the pick of the fielders. Tator played a wonderful game at third for the Herzls. On the Monday past, Judaean Benevolent went into second place in the Business Men's loop by defeating Mt. Sinai 13 to 6, Shimmerman and Zweig getting three hits apiece, while Madonick held the Mt. Sinai team to five scattered hits. In the second game Leonards caused a triple tie for first in the senior group by giving Herzls their second loss in a row, getting away to a good start by scoring five runs in the first inning, with Herzls making a big effort to win out by getting four runs in the fifth but Leonards deserved the 8 to 6 win, getting 10 hits to Herzl's 5. Issie Bossin and "Rube" Eisner played good ball in the field for the winners with Bossin being the big hitter. Results and standing in the two groups:

SEEKING DRIVER OF STOLEN CAR

Highway Traffic Officer A. R. Smith, of Burlington, had a lively hunt in the night of Saturday, July 21, for two men who were occupants of a Willys-Knight sedan, which collided with a coupe about three miles west of Bronte. The coupe was owned and driven by H. Sandler, of Buffalo, who was on his way home after visiting Toronto. According to the report received by Constable Smith, the sedan cut across the road and struck the coupe a glancing blow. Following the smash the two occupants of the sedan are said to have jumped out and, taking to the fields, escaped. Because of the heavy rain no trace of them could be discovered. Later it came to light that the sedan had been stolen from Toronto and was owned by Jacob K. Kringold, Beatrice Street. Both cars were badly damaged, especially the latter. The point where the collision occurred was practically the same spot where Charles Calkins suffered a fatal fractured skull in a motor accident a week ago.

The City Without Jews

By HUGO BETTAUER

Can a city expel its Jews and thrive? Would such a condition usher in the millennium, or retard progress? Hugo Bettauer, a Gentile, played with the idea, and produced a challenging novel that describes a state in which all Jews, rich and poor, are banished.

The tragic aftermath of this flight of fancy came in the murder of the author by a fanatic.

"The City Without Jews" quickly became the most talked-of book in continental Europe and went through 58 editions. Jews thought it pro-Gentile; Gentiles considered it pro-Semite.

Wittily, colourfully, without any tincture of propaganda, the author rears his city without Jews. Deftly he raises the curtain behind which a city, rid of all Jews, functions. Fascinated, we watch business, art, night life, and home life in Vienna after the Jews are thrown out. The difference makes one gasp with astonishment!

"THE CITY WITHOUT JEWS"

The recent anti-Semitic outrages in Austria and Germany impelled a prominent Gentile journalist to write this novel. It portrays vividly the effect on any city and any community of organized political legislation against a minority. While there is a beautiful love story woven around this situation the actual worth of the book lies in its practical denunciation of social and political intolerance.

In Europe this book has sold over a quarter of a million copies, and is one of the best sellers in the United States. A recent motion picture based on the book is now showing in New York and there is a possibility of its being released here.

Hugo Bettauer, the author, so stirred up the anti-Semitic party in Austria that he met a tragic and early death at the hands of a fanatic assassin.

"The City Without Jews" is obtainable from all the better book stores or from the publishers, The Marshall Hart Company, 319 Bay Street.

Dr. A. S. W. Rosenbach, manuscript and book collector, recently returned from Europe after spending $2,000,000 in purchases of rare works. Among his treasures was the original script of "Alice in Wonderland."

Lewis Browne, author of "That Man Heine," which The Literary Guild presented last October, is visiting with E. H. Furman, the print collector of Los Angeles. He is at work on a new book. Next month Mr. Browne expects to go to the MacDowell Colony at Peterborough, N.H., to do the second draft of his latest volume, and in August he is scheduled to give a course of lectures on the Humanizing of Knowledge at the State College of Pennsylvania. Following that he will probably return to Peterborough to do the third draft of his work. In September, Mr. Browne expects to visit his home in London before taking up his residence in New York in the fall, by which time he expects to have completed his work.

The engagement is announced between A. S. Diamond, M.A., LL.M., of Farrar's Building, Temple, eldest son of the Rev. and Mrs. S. Diamond, of Leeds, to Gladys Elkah, second daughter of Mr. Edward Lumbrozo Mocatta, of 122 Gloucester Terrace, W. 2, and the late Mrs. Mocatta.

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water, power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate farming and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

"—For an Oliver"

By CLAUDE TREMAYNE

Serge Bolckov was a product of "The Great Russian Revolution," since before the upheaval he was an obscure citizen of Stakow, a bootmaker by trade, a bully by inclination, with a particular hatred for the Jews who formed a small proportion of the population. With unquenchable fervour, aided by a voice which boomed like a foghorn from his massive chest, he seized his opportunities when the clarion call sounded and the task of freeing Russia was commenced by the simple process of eliminating all who viewed the new regime with disfavour. Before long Serge Bolckov became what was tantamount to the Governor of Stakow, its legislator and law-giver, an industrial dictator, bent upon turning the place into a modern Utopia of abbreviated working days wherein the labourer should be computed to be several times worthy of his hire.

How long this state of affairs would have lasted is problematical, for Serge Bolckov possessed but a hazy notion of the fundamental laws of economics, or so it would appear by the ruthless course he pursued. But it should be admitted that he had interests in the neighbouring Village of Revna, which, unrestricted, was flourishing at the expense of the little Town of Stakow.

The workers idolized him. Never before had they known such times, or enjoyed so much leisure in which to spend the money they made a pretence of earning. Actual unemployment was unknown, for it was decreed that none other than a citizen of Stakow should be allowed to hire out his labour, and there were severe penalties attaching to the offence of working beyond the hours decreed. Wages were stabilized—a fixed rate varying only with the size of a man's family so that the possession of children became an important consideration; and, as in other places the female population predominated in numbers, it was rumoured that Serge Bolckov was actually considering the legitimization of polygamy.

All of which would make it appear that the dictator of the Town of Stakow had become mentally unbalanced with the accession of power. But such was not the case. His object was not so much the destruction of what was left of wealth, as the elimination of the Jewish community which happened to possess it. Thus he hoped to clear the way for the unhindered acquisition of such wealth by his compatriots. To a point he succeeded. Many hitherto prosperous Jewish merchants, despairing of the impossible conditions under which they were compelled to trade, closed down their businesses and left. Their places were taken by "true-born" Russians, to whom Serge Bolckov immediately made concessions calculated to give them immeasurable advantages over their Jewish rivals, and so the position became further complicated. No one could be found, who was willing to work for the new syndicates at a cheaper rate or for longer hours than had become the Utopian custom. But the impasse thus created did not perturb Serge Bolckov. In the prison were men who were willing to work under any conditions to regain their freedom, and it was these people to whom he turned. Comparative freedom was theirs to work for his friends; immediate reincarceration the moment they essayed to work cheaply for the Jews. A simple solution, but one which entirely overlooked the now workless ex-employees. At Revna there were no vacancies for them, so they returned to Stakow to hold meetings in the approved fashion.

One morning the Utopian township of Stakow was plunged into excitement by news of the attempted assassination of Serge Bolckov. It appeared that late on the previous night, while on his way home, two shots had been fired at the dictator by an unseen assailant, one bullet wounding him slightly in the shoulder.

Indignation was expressed on all sides. The law became active, and no one doubted for a single moment who were the instigators of the outrage, least of all the police who hinted darkly that there were at least a dozen Jews capable of the act who were already under observation. An arrest could be expected at any moment—and several materialized; all Jews, every one a "capitalist," each an enemy of the constitution, the type of men for whom there was more room in Siberia than in Stakow.

But since a particular crime must be ascribed to a particular person, a further process of elimination was necessary; and eventually all were discharged except a young man who had made no effort to conceal his resentment at the trumped-up charge, had refused all information concerning himself and displayed a general contempt for the proceedings, all of which left no room for doubt that he was guilty of the attempted murder. So for the time being the public conscience became appeased, the Jews sorrowed for the unfortunate prisoner, Serge Bolckov's shoulder healed, and the person who was alleged to have damaged it awaited his trial.

From the commencement of the trial it was quite plain that the authorities were bent upon achieving a conviction at any cost, and their plans were aided by the continued disdainful bearing of the accused. Legal assistance (such as was offered) he declined, and when asked what he had to say in self-defence, he wasted his opportunity by indulging in sarcastic utterances which in no way tended to improve his case. . . . Why had he refused to reveal his name? Because it belonged to him, and so far as he could see was the only thing that could not be taken from him. Defence? He had none, since it would in any case be a waste of time. Was it feasible that anything he could say would convince his hearers of his innocence? Was it not their only desire to convict a Jew, and was he not as good as any other Jew for the purpose of punishment?

A most difficult prisoner. Made one feel uneasy somehow because there was a stir in the court at these utterances, which was not wholly devoid of sympathy. Neither did it emanate from his fellow-Jews, because—in order not to prejudice the case—they had been refused admission. Yet the decision was foregone, and the only reason sentence was not passed at once was because the legal machinery was affected by the Utopian scheme of things, and the conclusion of the court's working day intervened. Therefore, judgment was postponed until the morrow.

Moreover, Serge Bolckov himself was not present at the end of the proceedings, it being understood that he had gone home in answer to an urgent call.

Serge Bolckov hurried from the court, not so much because he was habitually swift of movement as by reason of the fact that he knew well why he had been summoned. There had been a change for the worse, surely. Perhaps . . . no not that. She had seemed to be a little better in the morning, and it was inconceivable that she should have relapsed so suddenly. But if anything had happened—

Twirling flakes or snow rapidly formed a mantle of white around him, and once he almost slipped upon a ball of frozen snow which collected under his heel. His thoughts were not pleasant, revolving as they did around the illness of his daughter—the one person in the world who really mattered to him, and upon whom he was wont to lavish a tenderness very contradictory to his treatment of other people.
